Joey,

Aaron Zahn wanted me to pass along this tidbit about Moody's. Apparently, Moody's didn't downgrade Nebraska Public Power District (see attached), even though NPPD is embroiled in litigation in which it seeks to invalidate a 20-year power purchase agreement. Granted, NPPD isn't arguing that the PPA is void for lack of authority; rather, it argues that the other party violated "change of control" provisions in the PPA. But it is still attempting to get out of a 20-year power purchase agreement. Also, similar to JEA, NPPD has stipulated to continuing to perform under the PPA until the court rules.

This goes to show that Moody's is not treating JEA the same way it treats other public utilities.
